An Episode of Friscan Life

The green-eyed monster of jealousy so im the vessel outside the harbor, and the Board of mortalized by Shakespeare's Othello, is abroad Health shall be notified of the facts. No Pilot in 'Frisco. From high to low, lively to serene, the demon glides and brings suspicion, madness, crime, in its train. Sometimes, however, we see verified the truth of the assertion that it is only one step from the sublime to the ridiculous, and a case happening the other day in our midst shows the tarcical side of what can be done under the influence of jealousy. We think the description can be made more graphic by relating the incident as a pen-picture, thus enabling the reader with his mind's eye to see how it is himself! So we say: Scene First-One of the fashionable hotels. Time, noon .- Millionaire invites pretty telegraph operator to dinner; unconscious that a female figure lurking near the office hears invitation given and accepted. Scene Second - Time, late afternoon, - All quiet on-not the Potomac-but the corridor. Woman stealthily approaches. Looks cautiously around. No one in sight. Fits key in lock of millionaire's door. Enters gorgeously appointed apartments, and, after hurried scanning of surroundings, enscouces herself behind large sofa in corner of room. Presently, from her hiding place sees millionaire come, ring bell, issue order for dinner for two, then seat himself for perusal of correspondence awaiting him, Idea strikes woman said letters a good field for future action. Preparations for dinner go forward. Odors of tempting viands and visions of many champagne bottles aid green-eyed monster in rendering watcher rampant. She only waits to have her suspicions verified. And then * * * Scene Third-Evening, and grand denouement -Expected visitor arrives, and is warmly welcomed, senses regaled by sight of banquet fit for the gods. Preliminary glass of champagne suggested. "There's many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip." Sure enough! ere the glass touches the lip of telegraph operator, it is dashed to the ground. Astonished millionaire beholds enraged former friend. Hills are green afar off, but seen close are indicative of a storm in the atmosphere. Grand music and closing tableaux.
